

Marilyn McMurray

Creativity has been my motivation and passion throughout my life. It started as a young person with music and continued as a college student. Then it became a passion for teaching. Every day with Students was a challenge to understand how to help learning happen. That was the motivation for returning to college for another degree so that I could work with students who needed more.

It challenged me in so many ways to look for what would work in order to cause success to happen. Painting has been the same for me.

The passion has not stopped. I still want to learn and find that every painting and every student and every class brings another insight. Using several mediums and several surfaces just continues the unexpected results that I enjoy.

Creativity still motivates.

Marilyn McMurray